

Problem Scenarios

The Client: Major University

The Problem: The University was under severe pressure. There was much competition for student places and there was a drive to try and obtain more funding through selling consultancy services to local as well as international companies. Change was needed and quickly for the university to compete effectively.

The Client: County Council

The Problem: The County Council has developed a close working relationship with the community through the formation of a strategic partnership arrangement. This is a multi-agency regional partnership set up to develop economic, social and environmental well-being of the community. This combined with a large number of internal projects meant a large number of projects for the council, were all delivered in different ways.

There were concerns within the authority to improve project management capacity – specially to deliver more effectively.

The Client: Major Investment Company

The Problem: The Company were aware that projects were not being delivered effectively. Few staff had been on project management courses and they had no overall project management approach. They developed their own project methodology and asked Project Agency to benchmark the document. They wanted to develop in house project management skills quickly.

The Client: Health Authority

The Problem: The health authority was undergoing rapid change and wanted to introduce care pathways. The problem was that there was no overall project management approach. Additionally, few people had any project management skills.
